A Suggestive Advertisement.

A firm in San Francisco advertises that it has certain negatives of a photographic firm, which the originals can secure, etc. Perhaps this is a gentle hint that certain society ladies who have been photographed nude can get the negative out of the way by calling during business hours.

The Bill Head Fiend.

Once in a while a printer will drop into a business house and accidentally enquire if they don't happen to be out of bill heads. The head of the house will, in almost every instance reply:
"Guess we don't need any now. Get enough to last a year. When we need any, will let you know."
"In that case let me have the order a week or so in advance and then, not being rushed, we can give the job proper care."
"Don't believe we'll need any for at least six months."
In about a week in comes the business man about 10 o'clock at night and a dialogue like this ensues:
"Got to have a thousand bill-heads right away."
"How soon?"
"Right away if I can get 'em."
"Can't have 'em to night."
"Why not?"
"Can't do job work at night, do you suppose a man's going to lug a candle all over the place doing fancy bill heads?"
"I on't want anything fancy, want just plain bill heads. Got a lot of bills to collect tomorrow, and this is the last bill head we have."
"Job man says he was round last week and you didn't want any."
"Didn't know that I was so near out. Can I have the work by noon. I'm in a devil of a rush?"
"Am crowded with work just now and all the printers in town are busy, can't give it to you inside three days."
Man goes out swearing and sends his order to San Francisco.

Insure.

It is the business of every married man to insure his life that he may make some provision for his family should he become suddenly taken off. Men are apt to neglect this duty from year to year, and then as they find their powers failing finally conclude to invest in insurance. They find that they have delayed so long that the rate is very high, and that they have become afflicted with bodily infirmities which cause the companies to decline the risk. Had they taken advantage of the opportunities presented by the companies a few years before, they would have fortified against all contingencies.

A man who is about to die will certainly meet death in a much more peaceful frame of mind if he realizes that a few days after the clouds are over him his widow and his children will receive several thousand dollars for the insurance on his life. The man who does not insure when the opportunity presents itself is not doing his duty by his family. The idea that good health and good fortune will last forever is absurd. Death may come tomorrow, and hard times or bad luck are almost as certain. Insure your life, keep the policy paid up, and in old age you will not be haunted by the thought that your demise means disaster to the survivors of your family.

The Frankel Case.

Judge Rising has shown himself in full command of the situation in presiding over the Frankel case at Virginia City. The imputations made against him he met with dignity, and very properly refused the Frankels a change of venue.

The accused, who were represented as penniless, are found employing the highest priced counsel on the Coast to keep them out of the Penitentiary. There will be plenty of money ready for the defense, and it is quite probable that these men, who have wrecked thousands of people and spread financial disaster everywhere, will never break any rock in the Penitentiary. They will, on the contrary, be running a new broker shop inside of three or four years.

Jones and the Mint.

The Congressional Record just at hand, gives a full report of the debate in the Senate on the appropriation for the Carson Mint, March 2d. Senator Jones led the debate against cutting down the Mint appropriations, answered all the objections, and by a common sense talk succeeded in defeating the proposed amendments.

—The telegraph reports from Russia state that there are now over 90,000 lunatics roaming at large all over the country. The asylums are full and the surplus are allowed their liberty. They have become a great nuisance in the smaller towns where they have attempted to run politics and start daily newspapers.

The Bishop Creek Band.

A brass band has recently been formed in Bishop Creek which numbers some twelve or fifteen pieces. Paradoxical as it may seem they only have a full band when all the members are sober. The people out in Bishop Creek have a great deal of amusement with the local musical organization and say they enjoy the music best, when the trombone and sub bass horn are off on a drunk. The instruments are all brand new and the surface of each is polished like a French plate glass mirror. The music recently sent out from Boston is also brand new most of it never having been used before. The leader however says that breaking in new horns and new music is not what it is cracked up to be.
A commercial drummer who hung over in Bishop creek the other day, to see a girl, tells us that when practicing a tune; the music is rendered with a great deal of feeling, each man feeling his way along the notes until he gets to a big loud one that he is familiar with and this he closes down on and hangs to with a tight grip until the other instruments reach it also. Then they all stop and picnic on that note till the leader comes up with his stick and tells them to move on. They then scatter and hunt new notes. The band talks of making a tour of the State as soon as the Inter-State Commerce Bill begins to operate.

Attributed to John Mackay.

(CHICAGO, March 16.—The Daily News tomorrow will publish a two column article, alleging that Commissioner Sparks of the General Land office at Washington has been attempting to form a combination with Governor Hill of New York to defeat the nomination of President Cleveland, and furnish the Democratic party with a ticket in 1888, reading "Hill and Sparks."

The evidence is said to be in two letters to a New York politician. Each of the documents are claimed to be now in the possession of Ed. Stokes and the publicity is due to the refusal of Sparks to allow a land claim worth $300,000, which the Nevada Bank of San Francisco has pending.

John W. Mackay is largely interested in that bank, and everyone knows that Mackay is the backer of Stokes in all his enterprises.

Ex-Congressman Frank Hurd, attorney for the bank is quoted as authority for the story. No statement from Sparks is given and the letters themselves are not published.

Cutting Affray.

Yesterday morning about 10 o'clock a man named Pike, and James Murry had an altercation in Robert's saloon. Pike, drawing a knife cut Murry in four places. Once in the hand, once just below the collar bone and twice in the back. Both men were placed under arrest. Murry's wounds are not dangerous.

—The extraordinary popularity of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the natural result of its use by intelligent people for over forty years. It has indisputably proven itself the very best known specific for all colds, cough, and pulmonary complaints.
